No parade for Noynoy

3 heads of state coming for no-frills inauguration

By TJ Burgolio

TO SAVE ON COSTS, PRESIDENT-ELECT BENIGNO "Noynoy" Aquino III will break tradition and do away with the parade at his June 30 inaugural.

"Since the first regular inauguration in 1953, this is probably the only one without the inaugural parade," historian Miriam Quizon II told the Inquirer yesterday on the phone. "We (Aquino) want to save money and because from his point of view, it's really unnecessary."

Aquino will take his oath as the Philippines' 15th President and deliver his speech at high noon on June 30 at the Quirón Grounds in Manila, in keeping with presidential law tradition.

In his three Asian leaders—last Times President Jose F. Macapagal, then Prime Minister Akinos P. Viganon and Malacanang Prime Minister Maik Pardo—have confirmed attendance at the inaugural, a foreign affairs official said.

"But we expect a number of foreign ministers and special envoys to attend," said the official, who asked not to be named for lack of authority to speak for the inaugural committee.

Their attendance "indicates solidarity and friendship" with us, the official said.

Secretary Ricardo Saludo, deputy spokesperson of President Macapagal-Arroyo, agreed, saying: "That's a vote of confidence."

Ramon Hone is a friend of Aquino's family. He was the only head of state who flew to the country in August 2009 to attend the wake and funeral of EVA ESTRADA KALAW THROWS down at her guests as she enters the hotel function room where a birthday party for her 90th birthday was to be celebrated on June 16.

"This is her debut. This is not a party for someone turning 90," said Yaneza, her youngest son.

For enough, the former actress and political opposition icon hardly looks her age. In her following appearance, Kalaw looks like a flamenco dancer ready for her performance. Her nails are painted a bright pink. The only concession to age is a cane she calls "my third leg" that she leans on when she walks.

Girl survives massacre but finds a father and a name

By Patricia Brangulles
Singapore, Philippines

IN POLICE ACCOUNTS, SHE WAS CALLED "the missing child." Hospital records registered her as "Baby Jane."

None of the people who entered the month-old infant into the emergency room knew her name. She was washed in blood and her breathing was shallow. There were cuts all over her body. One small hand had nearly been severed from her right arm.

This is the story of how she got her name and the father who loved it for her.

There were two incidents that shaped the life of the father who appeared at the Zamboanga Provincial Hospital in the late hours of May 20, 2009.

The first incident occurred at just seven in the evening, when a 25-year-old farmer entered Parok 2 in Barangay Lumban.

First prison orchestra sounds, feels like freedom to cons

THE 36-YEAR-OLD MOTHER WIFT visibly in the strains from a wind ensemble (that the halls of the Bureau of Corrections (BuCor) in the New Bilibid Prison (NBP) in Marikina. For more in the audience last week, it was the debut performance of the first ever prison orchestra and grand choir.

But for the joyful gray-haired woman, it was the first time that she was hearing her 34-year-old son sing in public.

"I want to see my son every single week. Each time I come here I ask him if I could stay here to be with him," said Lucinda Villano.

Wilson's son, Gerry, who has been in jail for the past 21 years for a robbery with homicide conviction, gave a moving rendition of the song "Three Men Looking for Akin."

Though he carries both a heavy load of regrets—his grandmother was a cop—Gerry never gave singing a thought until a few months ago when some inmates decided to put together the BuCor Grand Orchestra and Choir.

"We want to transform the time in prison into productive time. And time is what we all have here," said Walter Saguas, who organized the symphonic band and choral with fellow inmates.

Bangit to Aquino: AFP failed to end rebellion

By Vincent Caranica
Singapore Free Press

FORT DEL PILAR, BAGUIO CITY—Outgoing Armed Forces of the Philippines (AFP) chief of staff Gen. Danilo Bangit is leaving a damning report for incoming President Benigno Aquino III that admits the military's failure to meet the deadline for ending the communist insurgency in the country.

President Manong Mangat Aquino had imposed a June 20 deadline, which coincides with the end of the term, for the end of the 40-year guerrilla war. The AFP spokesman in Col. Arnel Inopacan said Bangit's report informed that the military had signed peace deals with the communist New People's Army (NPA) and other separatist groups in an effort to end the conflict.

"We did not handle the deadline [AFP] the insurgency has been reduced to only the abaca—Davao, Palawan provinces, Comoros Valley, Zamboanga and Basilan," Bangit told the boardroom on Saturday.

AFP proud of accomplishment

He also said military operations had cut the strength of the NPA from 28,000 to 1,000 fighters.

The AFP under Bangit's leadership could be proud of this accomplishment, he added.

Bangit's report will be part of the military's "ending terrorism" report to Aquino, who takes over on June 30. Aquino had not spoken to Bangit directly or through an intermediary before the AFP chief of staff announced his retirement, effective on Tuesday, a year since then officially when del. Bangit said.

Earlier, the President-elect announced that he would replace Bangit, who was named chief of staff by outgoing President Manong Mangat Aquino two days before the constitutional ban on appointing candidates to office.

Top AFP chief acknowledged Bangit to the Philippine Military Academy (PMA) here on Saturday where the outgoing chief was given a retirement reception.

The parade was given on the 40th day 225 2400 (retirement) today, Saturday.

ing to the PMA "DAGU Unit" Class of 24 graduates put at the end of the parade. A number of PMA "Makabatang" Class of 1975, which had adapted the AFP as its primary course, told the end of his service in the service fully confident he had fulfilled his duty "with no regrets, no regrets, no regrets."

New approach needed

Meanwhile, a senior military official said the AFP must "revitalize" its military approach if it also hopes to end a new insurgency—Abu Sayyaf's terror, which has spread the impact of radical Islam.

Gen. Francisco Dom, the AFP's Chief of Defense Services, said, and the government needs to come up with a "strategic response" to the problem.

The absence of an ideological dimension in the "fighting terrorism" is the government's counterterrorism program, he said.

"The more we focus on a war of attrition and attrition, the strategy to defeat Abu Sayyaf and radical Islam, as an ideological movement," Dom said in a written statement.

Dom described the Abu Sayyaf as a "politico-religious terrorist group" as shown by its previous attacks, including the Marikina Saboteur's Bay kidnapping in 2006.

"We must know the Abu Sayyaf and other Islamic extremist forces alive in the country is radical Islam, the so-called 'global jihadism,'" he said.

Landless activists

These observations were contained in his paper titled "Defeating Abu Sayyaf." The strong and urgent need for an ideological dimension, "ideological dimension" of the Institute of Defense and Strategic Studies in Singapore.

According to Dom, Abu Sayyaf's use of "salafist Islam" in justifying their activities had been very effective in recruiting members and gaining financial support from foreign Islamic groups such as the Islamic Movement of Malaysia and the Islamic Movement of Omani-Lanka.

Along with other state agencies, he said, the armed forces must develop counter-terrorism policies and the government and support services, training and Christian, and security and intelligence and intelligence of the community level.

By doing this, the government would "defeat the enemy state and government," he said.

He criticized the government's National Plan to Address Terrorism and its Comprehensive Plan to Defeat Abu Sayyaf "because it is not a strategic approach to counterterrorism."

Coined by the Anti-Terrorism Task Force, Dom argued that the program did not provide a holistic approach to counterterrorism "in that it was only an operational counterterrorism response, not a strategic counterterrorism response."

A military-based response is not enough to defeat the Abu Sayyaf and other Muslim extremist groups in the country, he said, adding "it would need a comprehensive approach to counterterrorism, which includes law enforcement, social, economic and psychological dimensions." Gov't opposes bid to get back Marcos kin's assets

By Robert C. Taylor Jr.

THE GOVERNMENT is opposing the bid of a new company owned by the heirs of the late dictator Ferdinand Marcos to reclaim their registered assets and funds.

The so-called Ibin Company, owned by Benjamin Ibin, a younger brother of Marcos' widow, had its bid to acquire the assets of the late dictator's family rejected by the government.

The Ibin Company also petitioned the Sandiganbayan anti-graft court on May 18 to order the return of their assets, since the case against them had been dismissed.

This is being opposed by the President's Commission on Good Government (PCGG), the agency created to recover the assets of the late dictator.

"The legality of acquisition of public property demands that the issue of ownership, which goes hand in hand with the determination of whether the assets in question constitute public property, be resolved first before acquisition can take place," the PCGG said in its motion.

In January 2008, the Sandiganbayan 15th Division dismissed the complaint against Ibin, Antonio Bualay & Development Corp. and Ibin Finance Holding and its counsel and attorneys by disqualification.

The case said the government failed to show a "bill of particulars" which would have detailed losses to the late dictator and the Ibin Company to recover the assets.

The Supreme

Court later upheld the ruling and ordered the government's appeal.

The Ibin Company then filed a request for the dismissal of the case from "before court" to a "definitive court" that then was presided over by Justice Antonio Carpio.

The PCGG said the Ibin Company was "not a party" to the case and should be dismissed.

Jail guard's invention saves on power

By Julie M. Rando

AN INMATE AT THE QUEZON City Jail is pushing forward on a stationary bike, beads of sweat trickling like fat tears down his back.

But he's not only out to lose those extra pounds. He wants to help save on electricity consumption in the overcrowded jail that has kept him here for the past two years.

Each inmate on the stationary bike is wired to electric power cabled on a battery attached to the bike, which the jail can use to power electric fans and light bulbs. It can even have water for growing coffee.

The Bureau of Jail Management and Penology (BJMP) has yet to give the concept a reality name, but it has caught the interest of both inmates and jail guards who say they can save electricity bills by up about half two-inches of inmate pay.

Today, the BJMP's "Bicycle Motor in Power" project aims to make use of the inmates' "potential energy" by encouraging them to sweat it out on the bikes—and generate electricity on the side.

Dual purpose

"Biking serves a dual purpose in here. The inmates can exercise and shed a few pounds, so they save time, the electric generators electricity that they themselves use," said BJMP National Capital Region director Ched Reyes in an interview.

The jail official said that with the device, they hope to bring down the electricity bill of the crowded Quezon City Jail, which houses more than 1,000 inmates.

For the project, each of the jail's eight dormitories will get its own bike and battery substation for $2,000 a unit.

"One stationary bike generating 100W/200W was reduced to P15,000 after we cut down on the manual appliances. With this gadget, we hope to be able to power up simple appliances, especially water heaters that we use for the inmates' morning coffee," said jail warden Regie Madero in a report.

The contraption—a stationary bike supported by metal collected from a junk shop, a car battery and a light bulb to demonstrate the effect—is the brainchild of a jail guard who once worked as a car mechanic.

Unapped energy

BJMP National Director, the man behind the invention, said the device works like a big dynamo that makes use of the inmates' potential energy that is largely unused as they spend time behind bars.

"I thought that since the inmates go to bed, they give us trouble, why not use that energy in a more productive way," he said.

Each battery can be charged in two to three hours at a station on the stationary bike.

"This is an invention we came up with regarding the problem of lack of electricity, a big electricity bill and global warming caused by harmful emissions. The only solution from nature is the use of solar energy," he laughed.

"Two to three minutes of pedaling by an in-

Scoreless draw pushes England near the brink

US rallies, salvages 2-2 result

CAPE TOWN, SOUTH AFRICA—ALGERIA led England to a 0-0 draw Friday and left one of the World Cup favorites on the brink of elimination with one game to go in the first round.

With a solid, physical defensive line and several bright moments, England looked tense and inspired, struggling throughout against an opponent fighting to avoid becoming the first to be eliminated from the World Cup.

"We showed aggressive enough," England captain Wayne Rooney said.

Goalkeeper Joe Hart said, "The game is a bit of a test for us. It's not the England that I know."

The British acknowledged that many players had fallen out of the World Cup picture.

"It's incredible, the situation of the players. What you see on the field, when you want the ball, when you have your players—there's nothing," he said.

The match set up a Group C finale on Wednesday with England taking on Slovenia and the United States playing Algeria. Slovenia leads the group with three points, followed by England and the United States with one each. Algeria has none.

"We got no reaction," Gerrard said. "We got in position, but the last pass."

Even slightly costly. Robin van Persie was a bit of a problem for England.

"I thought it would be better," Gerrard said. "They were not at their best."

Capitano looked frustrated.

Robert Green and brought back Steven Nouri to boost confidence in the defense. With the return of defender Michael Owen, there would be no problem to provide defense against a treatment center.

But England did not defend in the same way. Instead, they tried to win the World Cup by playing more, struggling against. Failed to score because they were not at their best.

"We're not playing like we were," Capitan said.

Algeria, fighting for World Cup survival, won the match by taking the game to England and leading goal during the first half and goal enough afterward.

And on a day when England is ready to play, Germany 1-0 and Italy 2-0, Algeria produced a record of 10 wins.

It took more than a half hour for England to get a shot on goal, as Steve Nouri and Rooney proved to be an ineffective duo.

Michael Owen and Andrew Johnson scored in the second half as the United States scored the Slovenia a win that would have made them the first team to advance to the knockout round.

A third American goal was doubtful by a second goal.

"The record is not enough to fight to in return," said United States coach Bob Bradley, Michael's father.

Jackson staying with Lakers?

Every day 'still a struggle' for Johnny Delgado's girls

By Mariela R. Cruz

HEALING IS A LONG AND difficult process for Anna and Isabella, daughters of actor Johnny Delgado (Juan Hernandez), who died in November last year.

"Every day is still a struggle," Anna told Inquirer during a recent visit to the Delgado home in Sherman Village, Quezon City. "Isa, Mariana, Jackson-Daniel, Leticia (Gabby) and I are coping in different ways."

Anna added: "We've been advised to dwell on happier times with him...and, that's hard and difficult. What we must realize most easily on Dad's last few months. Cancer is the worst thing that can happen to anyone."

They mean, who has always been the "OG" type in "The OG" scene, has said, "Love from a month after Daddy died, she asked us to pick away his things. At that point, Anna and I still needed everything to stay the way they were. But in Mariana, I figured I was in contact with [crying] the house. I would be sleeping, suddenly she said, 'Yung mga gamit'."

Johnny struggled with lymphoma for a year. He was 47 when he died.

"I'd like to talk to Dad in my dream, to feel his presence. I don't have any 15 minutes," said his sister in the end of 2008. "I'm crying because."

Plus, the sisters have been doing different things. "It helps us to get on with our lives," Anna said. "Some people are sometimes."

They recently went to Buenos Aires, said, "I'm going to see Daddy and the family of Daddy's other 4 kids. Mariana said a pretty thing. She and Daddy both loved the sea. On

'Sad, scary, sentimental' reunion

Sharon, Gabby today, in their daughter KC's eyes

By Remy Hernandez

IC CONCEPTION ASKING THAT the reunion of her parents Sharon Dancel and Gabby Concepcion on the "Sharon" Sunday show (June 13 and tonight) may "be so sentimental" as her sister says in a public figure.

"I thought I was going to have a warm reunion... But I would expect something from the ABC-GBN studio," she stated at the recent family of Delgado's "No longer" (June 13).

KC recalled that her parents were re-united for what seemed to be the longest time. "They were not on speaking terms. That's why when I visited my Papa in the United States three years ago, I didn't know they got to talk on the phone... without fighting."

'Like my wedding'

The federal wedding was holding up for that family moment when they finally got together tonight for the taping of their two episodes. Highlights of the prime campaign for her movie with (June 13) "Be True" (Sharon).

"I married because I realized that all these things need to be done after. [The wedding] felt like my wedding day. It felt like a big celebration. So if we were at the Ateneo Center, because the energy of the live audience was high," KC recalled.

Seeing her parents together was funny, sad and sentimental, she felt.

"It was something in the highest level I would be to all my life, but it was not because that's not just for a TV
